Interpretable Machine and Statistical Learning in (Sports) Medicine

In this talk, first an overview of the most well-known and relevant machine and statistical learning techniques is given and their basic idea is shortly sketched. Moreover, then a short literature review is provided on which of these techniques are already frequently used in (sports) medicine. Finally, some of the recently developed techniques facilitating the interpretation of these of complex and black box-type techniques are illustrated.